Platelet-Rich Plasma (PRP) is blood plasma that has been enriched with platelets. Platelets contain growth factors; when applied to the skin, they can stimulate the growth of collagen.

Collagen plumps the skin, giving it a youthful and supple appearance. PRP for facial rejuvenation has been used since 2006. It can be used to smooth out wrinkles and areas around the eyes, mouth, cheeks, neck, and jawline.

PRP uses your body's own platelets to bolster collagen production, resulting in younger-looking skin. The procedure starts with a simple blood draw. The blood is then processed and separates platelets and other growth factors in the blood. The mix of platelets and growth factors is then injected into areas of the face affected by aging. It's that simple.
